108543	12/2/2019	Request that a copy of the following documents: "In 2002 a Team of Professors and scientists at the University of Sussex, England has developed /invented and successfully tested remotely sensing EEG Brainwaves with sensors. Professor Tonmoy Sharma and Lead research Professor Terry Clark of The University of Sussex have developed these sensors that can read brainwaves without having to touch the human head at all. They can remotely pickup and read of the EEG Brainwaves with these sensors they have developed. [INSERT WEB LINK]. In 2003-2004 the Waveband Corporation was developing this MAE System or the Microwave Auditory Effect System or called MEDUSA, and had a contract with the US Navy. In 2002-2003 the Waveband Corporation along with the US Navy, the DOD, and the Pentagon, and the NSA (National Security Agency) has acquired these EEG Brainwave reading sensors from the University of England and has incorporated these EEG Brainwaves sensors either into large radar dishes, or attached them to cell phone transducers towers and or made these sensors small enough that they started putting them into cell phones for production. This WaveBand Corporation made these senses small enough to fit inside all Cell Phones including iPhone, and Androids. And then in 2005 the Sierra Nevada Corporation bought the contract from the Waveband Corporation and continued to develop more on the EEG Brainwave sensors developed by the University of Sussex. The Sierra Nevada Corporation has is still continuing to develop these EEG brainwaves reading sensors with this MAE System and the US Navy, and the Pentagon and the NSA National Security Agency. The Pentagon, the NSA, and the DOD are developing this MAE System so that only one individual can hear the voices and sounds put inside their head. This MAE System is a Microwave Auditory Effect System used to voice-to-skull and remote neural monitoring of an individual. This Waveband Corporation and the Sierra Nevada Corporation does have government contracts with the DOD and NSA." Date Range from years 2001-2005.	Not Agency Record
